years ago before the era of innovation began there were systems that paved the way for what we know today as the vending machine. There once was a box and within that box were sections of potato chips, cookies candy, breathe mints and gum. Some of the comestibles that you see today in what is now called vending machines were in those boxes. There was a slot in these boxes where you were required to place a designated amount of money for the cost of the goods that you had taken. This constituted and validated an actual sale and purchase. These methods were based on honor and trust. We called it the honor system. Our society was based on the honor system. We paid for our gas on the honor system. It was pump your gas first and pay for it later. This system worked for many years successfully. People followed instructions well back then. They innately did what was right. The first course of action with them was to do the right thing anything else was just not an option.

Not paying for gas was unheard of, until... the dreaded dubious aberrant behaviors of some, uncorrected of course- recidivism at its best, resulted in a new way of doing things, hence; putting an end to a once effective way of living, making it more costly for us all.

The loss prevention methods were more costly and that cost was and still is passed on to the patron. The consumer pays for the ills of society in every aspect.

Our society adjusts to the ills of society because we are forced to, it's our defense mechanism. When we are perpetually required to build defense mechanisms to protect ourselves from each other to the point that it drastically changes society adversely, we become a place of hurts and brokenness making us weak and fragile. We can't look back and change the damages of the past, but in moving forward we can decide to remain a society of brokenness or become a place of strength and honor that has recovered from its ills. We can move forward with an attitude of resilience stemmed from adherence to a necessary order. That order is honor and trust so that we are restored to that place that once made it a monument to say "in God we trust". In God there is order, honor and trust. No society can exist without it.

Safenets GTD is taking you back to the days of honor, are you ready to be restored?

where comfort finds peace

A wonderful ending to every story is a happy one; just like a perfect ending to every day is a peaceful one - that makes a happy ending.

Safenets Going the Distance is the place that makes happy endings each and everyday. It's the comfort in knowing the peace that's well deserved is provided.

It's nice to have something to come home to. It's also nice to know that you are safe when you get there and so is every one else in there.
